

LADY MODISH ON THE FASHION SHOW.

for usually, on her way home from war-work headquarters, she tarries in Paris long enough to buy a few new things. One feature distinguishes all those she has worn in New York since her return this time, namely, that every skirt is very short, too short, I should say, for a beauty of such noble proportions. I wonder whether the gowns are cut in this way because she overruled the wishes of her Paris couturiere?

It was generally believed that Paris had reluctantly come to agree with New York. The designers in the two cities were at odds with each other about the length of the skirt last fall. Paris prescribed short skirts. New York dressmakers were starting the long-skirt propaganda. In any event, Miss Morgan's costumes all give much display of her ankle. They are, moreover, all new.

Recently she wore a gown of smoke-colored chiffon velvet made without any trimming. This was of rather awkward ankle length. With it she wore a hat covered with the smoke-colored velvet. The brim was turned up sharply at the left and almost to a point on a line with her mouth hung a fringe of smoke-colored glycerined feathers.

No hat with these straight, shiny feathers is likely to be a last year's model.

Iver a short-skirted dinner gown of creamy, filmy material covered with tiny opalescent beads and with a narrow band of skunk for outlining the V neck, she wears a stunning cloak of golden brown satin with a skunk collar. Around the shoulders of the cloak is shirred closely. Below this close shirring there is a wide band showing the brown satin more loosely shirred. From this band the cloak falls in folds. It flares instead of tapering toward the ankles in the trying style of many cloaks first seen last fall.

A green, silk afternoon gown she wears is patterned with long black lines and large black coin spots, while part of the fabric is solid black instead of green. The black thread lace that falls from the neck in back is inserted in the sleeve seam half-way to the elbow. The skirt has four panels loose from the foundation turned up and under in festoon fashion at the hem. The panel in back hangs in a loop much longer than the others, but does not touch the floor.—Lady Modish in Town Topics.

"I hope our war decorations for valor will be given with a more sparing and juster hand than has been the custom in the past," said Senator J. Hamilton Lewis on his return from France. "You often see across the water a shabby private, minus a leg or an arm, with a single modest decoration on his breast, and you then say to yourself, 'That decoration was earned.' But often, too often, you see politicians and elegant young princelings whose breasts are a jingling glitter of decorations, and before this sight you say nothing. You just shake your head. One day at a dinner I noticed three decorations on a personage's tunic, and I murmured maliciously to the Frenchwoman at my side: 'Can you tell me, madame, why the duke got those three decorations?' 'To be sure I can,' said the Frenchwoman. 'He got his third decoration because he had two, and his second because he had one, and his first because he had none.'"

"Ever have any trouble with your ingenue?" "We used to have some trouble with her," replied the manager, "but her press agent solved the problem." "How?" "Whenever she has a tantrum he gets the newspapers to publish the pictures of her two sons who are now holding commissions under Pershing in France."—Birmingham Age-Herald.
